“ Frankie is my friend. Yes, I know his name is Daniel, but to me, he'll always be Frankie. We met thru a mutual friend, at my house, on Gray Street, before he actually moved there himself. We had a lot of good times, and some bad, together and we had forged a bond thru both. The bond was held together by the things we had in common. The most memorable of the bad times was i helped him clean out his eyes when he had accidentally put glue in them instead of eye drops. It wasn't funny at the time, but later we often laughed about it and he told everybody that I saved his eye sight. One of the best memories was that, for my birthday, he made me a ten speed bike. He gathered parts from, God knows where (he was very resourceful, lol), and he built that bike from scratch, from the ground up. He told me it took him almost a week and then he even painted it my favorite color. I was completely surprised by it and when he presented it to me I actually cried. I hadnt ridden a tenspeed bike in close to 40 years and here i was turning 50 and my good friend made me one with his own two hands. I don't think that I've ever received a more thoughtful gift. Frankie had a big heart and he would literally give you the shirt off of his back. He had a great sense of humor and nothing made him happier than to pull someone's leg. He'd actually get a glint in his eye when he thought he was pulling the wool over yours, lmao
Love you, Frankie. Youll be sorely missed, until we meet again...
